Sharon says he was offered Israel's defence ministry

TEL AVIV (AFP) - Israeli Foreign Minister Ariel Charon said on Sunday that he was asked by Prime Minister Benyamin Netanyahu to replace ousted refence minister Yitzhak Mordechai but refused. "He offered me the post and I refused. I told him that I am quite content where I am," Sharon said in a live inter-view with public television. On Saturday Netanyahu fired Mordechai, finalising the rupture between the two rivals ahead of May elections. Netanyahu immediately said he had asked former defence minister Moshe Arens, an elder statesman who had been leading an internal revolt against the prime minister inside the governing Likud party, to return to the post.

Bill Clinton lacks respect for the presidency, but believes the country will bounce back after Clinton's impeachment trial ends. "I have tried to stay out of all the Washington mess," Bush said Saturday at the end of a keynote address to the Safari Club International's 27th annual hunters' convention. "But I must confess I have been deeply concerned by what appears to be a lack of respect for the office I was so very proud to hold." Speaking to an audience of international biggame hunters and conservationists, Bush was confident any national embarrassment caused by Clinton's sex scandal would be short-lived.

Sahhaf slams Arab states for 'plotting' against Iraq

CAIRO (AFP) - Iraqi Foreign Minister Mohammad Said Al Sahhaf on Sunday accused Arab countries of plotting against Iraq after he stormed out of an Arab meeting here that failed to meet Baghdad's call for a unilateral lifting of U.N. sanctions.

"The document is a plot aimed ar covering up new U.S. and British attacks on Iraq." Sahhaf said of a final statement which Arab foreign ministers adopted at the meeting called to discuss the Iraq cri-

The meeting was still continuing amid efforts by some members to find a compromise, delegates told AFP, but the Iraqi foreign minister was scathing in his criticism of his Arab counterparts after his angry walkout.
"The Hurghada

The foreign ministers of Egypt. Yemen. Oman, Syria and Saudi Arabia met twice this month in the Egyptian Red Sea resort of Hurghada to map out Sunday's meeting.

They are expressing their concern for the use of force and are setting up a follow-up committee to see about the lifting of the sanctions and yet lraq is not a member of this committee. Instead they have chosen hostile countries like Saudi Arabia," Sahhaf con-

This statement is a mockery," Najm, an undersecretary at the Iraqi foreign ministry, told reporters at the Nile-front headquarters of the 22-member Arab League.

Baghdad wanted Arab foreign ministers to defy the crip pling sanctions which the U.N. Security Council slapped on trace after its 1990 invasion of Kuwait. It also wanted a strong and united Arab condemnation of last month's U.S. and British air strikes on Iraq.

But in their final statement the foreign ministers did not call for an immediate lifting of the sanctions and did not condenin outright the U.S.-British strikes.

Instead they voiced their "deep concern and preoccupation over the use of military force against Iraq" and underlined "the need to multiply international efforts directed at lifting the emburgo as soon as possible.

They further angered Bughdad hy demanding an Iraqi apology for its invasion of Kuwaii and by demanding that Iraq "immediately stop provoking its neighbours," linking this to future efforts

IRAQ IS boosting its air defences in the south, but is not threatening Kuwait, the governor of the southern city of Basra said.

"We are prepared for all Ahmad eventualides." Ibrahim Hammash told reporters late on Saturday when asked about reports that Iraq was sending extra military bardware to the area. The reinforcements are there. They are air defence reinforcements," he said. adding that Iraq would continue to challenge planes patrolling the imposed no-fly zone.

"Everything we can reinforce, we are reinforcing. More than that I cannot say," he said. An Iragi opposition group said on Friday that Iraq has been building up its armed forces, including missile systems, in the south since mid-December. The remarks followed a report that military convoys, including lanks, were seen heading south.

"Certainly, these moves are exceptional," rather than routine, the governor said. But he added that they represented a normal response for a country facing a threat.

Asked about the no-fly zones, the governor said: We will challenge this aggression, and will continue to challenge it. We will not accept a mandate of anyone

Politicians, activists reiterate call for reforms to strengthen democracy

By Francesca Ciriaci

AMMAN - Deputies and political activists on Sunday reiterated their call for political reforms, saying they hoped that any change in the line of succession to the Throne would be coupled with reforms that would enhance the country's infant democ-

They said they hoped that a "comprehensive review" promised by His Majesty King Hussein in a televised address to the nation from London prior to his return home on Tuesday would include the introduction of more liberal laws - especially those dealing with press freedoms and parliamentary elections. King Hussein, the region's longest-serving ruler, has yet to spell out the changes he intends to introduce to consolidate Jordan's stabiliand strengthen democratic reforms he initiated in 1989. But mounting speculation in the capital's elite circles over the past few days has only focused on the issue of succession.

"It is the King's constitutional prerogative and right to choose his crown prince," a senior official told the Jordan Times.

"And no one is questioning that." Officials yesterday also brushed aside some concerns raised at home and abroad about the foreign policies of the Kingdom, a crucial and patient partner in the Middle East peace process and a key Western

While the deadlocked Israeli-Palestinian peace process is casting a heavy shadow over the region, lawnrakers and politicians insisted on the urgency of introducing new election and press laws and the need for a review of the 1952 Constitution to enhance the role of Parliament, further protect human rights, and modernise" the political system. The appointment of a new crown prince and democratic reforms are two separate issues," said Abdul Lanf Arabivat, secretary general of Jordan's strongest party, the Islamic Action Front. Further amendments in 1997 to an already restrictive press law and an historic decision to boycott the November 1997 elections by the powerful Muslim Brotherhood, joined by nine opposition parties and the $0,000-strong Union of Professional Associations, as well as a list of more than 80 prominent politicians, added further fuel to the

The contention among politicians is that the government would not venture into amending those two laws unless it got the go ahead from the King. Some also said several reforms were needed to guarantee the separation and integrity of the three branches of power.

A former minister, Jamal Shaer, a veteran Ba'athist who has wrinen extensive articles on the Constitution, told the Jordan Times in a recent interview that the country's national statute needed "first to be respected, and second to be amended, if we want to arrest the degradation of our political system."

Reformists of all shades have long said they would like to see a more independent judiciary, an extension to the four-month term for ordinary parliamentary sessions, and the abrogation of certain laws that limit citizens' constitutional rights.

"Have we forgotten all about the National Charter?" asked a former minister. Drafted in 1992 to push the country into a new era of liberalisation and political and social reconciliation after more than three decades of martial law, the National Charter called among other things, for the establishment of a Constitutional Court, which has yet to become a

'If we want to open a new page, and Iraq is required to apologise for an incident, it will come within a collective apology that is just. We are ready for that," Deputy Prime Minister Tareq Aziz was quoted as saying hy Iraq's most influeotial newspaper.

The comments are a surprising reversal in Iraq's hardline attitude against some Arab countries chiefly Saudi Arabia and Kuwait — for supporting the mid-December airstrikes on the country by the United States and Botain.

The timing of Aziz's comments are significant: they were published the day the 22-member Arab League began a meeting in Cairo to discuss Iraq's demand to coo-demn the U.S.-British airstrikes and call for Arab defiance of U.N. trade sanctions against Iraq.

In recent weeks, President Saddam Hussein had called on Arabs to overthrow their pro-American governments. Even Aziz, in lengthy newspaper commentaries, hurled insults at Arab leaders.

But Aziz, in his conciliatory remarks, invoked Arab solidarity and justified the need for apologising by saying "after all, in the end, we are all sons of one tribe and mistakes could happen between us."

Babel picked up Aziz's comments from an interview he gave to Beirut's Al Nahar newspaper. It didn't say when Aziz spoke with Al

"I don't say Iraq didn't make mistakes against this or that, but everybody has committed mistakes," Aziz said.

"If we all apologised to each other for all the mistakes we have committed, then we will be ready... because apologizing is not a shame between brothers," he

Iraq had repeatedly sought to justify the Kuwait invasion, which led to the imposition of U.N. trade sanctions. Under the Gulf War ceasefire conditions, the sanctions cannot be lifted until Iraq is certified by a U.N. arms commission as free of weapons of mass destruction.

The United States and Britain, which are opposed to lifting of the sanctions, had bombarded Iraq to punish it after U.N. arms inspectors said Baghdad was blocking their work.

MANAMA (R) - Saudi Arabia began to extend its Interpet service to local service providers (ISPs) this mooth, allowing local inhabitants cheap access to the world wide web, industry officials said oo Sunday.

They said the King Abdul Aziz City for Science and Technology (KACST), the body charged with supervising the net, extended the service to about seven ISPs from Jan. 2. It is free of charge for one month.

"We have extended the Internet to our customers in Riyadh, Jeddah and Dammam in the past two weeks," ISP project manager at the Dammarn-based Compulink Informatioo System, Mohammad Ansar, told Reuters.

Previously, people living in Saudi Arabia could only access the service by making expensive international calls to ISPs in neighbouring countries, like Bahrain.

"Up to now only about seven ISPs are ready. It's now in the testing phase for about a month as a free service, but full operation will start from the first week of February," Ansar said.

"Only around seven ISPs, out of around 20 qualified, have been connected. Only seven are active, others are not prepared yet to receive the service." he added.

But the session turned ugly when Sboul responded to a statement by deputy Mahmoud Kharabsheh urging legislators to reject the recommendation of the Legal Committee to lift immunity.

Khrabsheh, a former intelligence officer, said the government was "hasty" in demanding that immunity be lifted.

He added that the govemment failed to adopt the same position when the prosecutor general made a similar request in the case of three former water ministers implicated in the water seandal that rocked the country last summer.

Kharabsheh "security departments" and "political opponents" of Abbadi of "masterminding the case," and lashed out at the government for its "involvement" in the case against his col-

The case was nothing but "fabrication and framed accusations," the deputy said.

Shoul strongly rejected Kharabsheh's statement and insisted that legal proceedings against the deputy must be implemented.

The justice minister also denied Kharabsheh's charges that "some (security[circles" involved in the case and described his comments as "untounded."

His remarks drew severe criticism from deputy Sa'ed Havel Srour who accused the minister of "influencing deputies against Abbadi."

Srour, a former House speaker, demanded that Shoul's statement be scrapped from the House's minutes of deliberation. "Lifting the immunity is a matter that concerns Parliament members alone. The government has no right to interfere or to influence the deputies' opinions by such statements," Srour told Parlia-Kharabsheh then threatened that if Shoul's statement was not scrapped from the minutes, he would "produce documents and evidence that prove the government's involvement in the case." Veteran Lower House Deputy Abdul Ra'out Rawabdeb urged that the justice minister's words not be scrapped, but also urged Kharabsheh to apprise the Lower House of all information that would substantiate his claims.

Minister of Interior Nayef Qadi said scrapping the statement of Sboul was not acceptable, and said his colleague did not infringe on the House's internal laws.

Rawabdeh said atmosphere under the dome was tense and proposed that the debate be postgoned; a recommendation approved by the majority.

The proposed recommendation to lift the immunity stipulates that Abhadi could be tried and interrogated but gave no right to authorities to 5,000 foreign workers rectify status in 1999

AMMAN (J.T.) - Since the start of 1999, 5,000 non-Jordanian workers have rectified their legal status and adjusted to the Ministry of Labour's requirements by acquiring work permits, according to Minister of Labour Mahdi

Nearly 1.6 million military personnel and their families benefit from a medical insurance scheme introduced in 1963 by the Royal Medical Services. Nearly 400,000 people are insured by private sector firms and institutions.

Health ministry finalises health insurance scheme

The minister pointed out that medical insurance will be basic and restricted to the country's 22 state-run hospitals and nearly 1,000 out-patient health care facilities.

"Patients who wish to be included in the scheme will receive basic medical care at governmental facilities," be said, "The ministry will share the expenses of those who wish to be treated in the private sector, but will only meet the cost equivalent to that of a government institution." For example, he said, delivery in a private bospital costs JD100, modestly, but in Al Bashir Hospital it eosts JD20. The government would therefore only_ compensate JD20, "Those who are not poor, as defined by the Ministry of Social Development, and who are not medically insured, will have to pay the cost of treatment," the minister said.

Ajlouni said that 55 per cent of this not poor-not insured category who seek treatment at the ministry's hospitals will pay nominal fees which covers up to 18 per cent of the actual cost of treatment. Poor families are defined as those who either have no salary earners and are entirely dependent on modest state assistance, or who are partly dependent on state assistance.

He said that the plan entails free coverage of an additional 200,000 citizens who cannot afford to pay, but this segment of the scheme will be implemented in cooperation with the Ministry of Social Development.

Meanwhile, Ajlouni said, people who seek treatment at state-run hospitals and who can afford to pay and do not wish to be covered by the scheme will be charged the full cost of reatment.

The minister stressed that an increase in the price of medical treatment that reflects the actual cost of treatment will be announced after the government offers the health insurance scheme covering

Preference for gas over kerosene costs Kingdom JD17 million annually

AMMAN (J.T.) — The use of liquefied gas for domestic purposes, specially for heating homes, has dealt the country a JD17 million loss in 1997, said a study conducted by the 38,000member Jordan Engineers

Association (JEA). The JEA was prompted to eonduet the said study by the latest gas crisis which took many Jordanians by surprise during the Holy Month of Ramadan.

The use of liquefied gas instead of kerosene to heat homes is the cause for the loss, since local imports of liquefied gas increased while the country could have imported almost the same amount of kerosene at a lower cost.

"Jordan imported around 56.717 tonnes of liquefied gas in 1997 at an average of $397-per tonne, while the 61,000 tonnes of kerosene at S172-per tonne for the same purpose," said the study which was forwarded to Prime Minister Fayez

The price difference between liquefied gas and kerosene was estimated by the JEA to have caused the country to lose around JD12 million. The estimate does not include the cost of transport and the eost of "The Jordan Petroleum Refinery Company will have to double its storage capacity in order to meet the market's unexpected demands which would cost 20 times the cost of storing kerosene," said the study. The study also warned that gas heaters are danger-gas cylinders.

An increasing use of gas beaters eaused an increase ders, leading the country to import 320,000 cylinders between the year 1992 and empty gas eylinder eosts

According to the study, shipping liquefied gas from the port city of Agaba to the country's three gas storage stations costs around $2,100,000 annually.

the heater or the valves could cause an explosion in the house in no time," said the study. However, an official from the Royal Scientific Society said liquefied gas is eleaner than any other fuel and hence has the least negative impact on environment. He said any misuse of gas heaters or heaters that burn kerosene also can be very dangerous if not handled carefully as the fumes can cause suffocation if the gas does not burn properly, and ean also present a danger of fire since kerosene is highly flammable.

The source also said that the use of gas and kerosene heaters becomes particularly dangerous when owners misuse them.

"Every year we hear about people who suffocate in their sleep because they use their heaters at night, for example," he said.

Education ministry to provide day meals to underprivileged children

AMMAN (J.T.) — The Ministry of Education Sunday signed an agreement with the Ministry of Planning 10 provide school ehildren in underdeveloped regions of Jordan with day meals.

The Ministry of Education's Secretary General Izzat Jaradat, who signed the agreement, said nearly 10,000 ehildren, from the first to third grades, will benefit from the programme which will eover poor areas in the following districts: Deir Allah, South Sbuneh, Agaba, Ma'an, Northern Badia and Tafileb. Jaradat said the agreement is expected to aid in boosting ehildren's learning capabilities and in enabling them to acquire new skills.

Ministry of Planning Secretary General Abdul Razzak Bani Hani, who signed for his department, said the programme marks the commencement of projects included in the governmentsponsored social safety net programme undertaken by the Ministry of Planning. The programme will be gradually extended to cover various government schools and is expected to boost the ehildren's psychological and physical status. According to Bani Hani, the programme will cost JD 773,000 this year, an amount earmarked in the social safety net's budget for this year. Last month the government announced that the social safety net plan, to be implemented over a 10-year period is expected to cost an estimated JD698 million noting that the first phase of the plan covering the period 1998-2001 will cost JD178

The programme covers less-developed regions, including the country's 13 Palestinian refugee camps and aims at modernising infrastructure services and creating jobs.

MOSCOW (AP) — President Boris Yeltsin will remain in the hospital for at least another week while he undergoes treatment for a stomach ulcer, a news agency reported Sunday. "Doctors appraise Boris Yeltsin's health as satisfactory," presidential spokesman Dmitry Yakushkin told the ITAR-TASS news agency. "Planned therapy in progress. The president's blood pressure and temperature are in the norm." Yeltsin was admitted to the Central Clinical Hospital with a bleeding stomach ulcer on Jan. 17. His doctor. Sergei Mironov, said at the time he expected treatment of the ulcer to last for two or three weeks. It was the fifth time that the 67-year-old president has hospitalised since his reelection in 1996. Doctors decided last week that Yeltsin would not require surgery and said the medicinal treatment of his ulcer appeared to be working. The president will remain in the hospital for at least another week, ITAR-TASS said, citing unidentified sources in the Kremlin.

According to Yakushkin, Yeltsin was likely to have sev-

OSCE's Walker fears increasing Kosovo violence

PRISTINA, Serbia (R) -Kosovo seems primed for more violence despite a release of Serb hostages and ethnic Albanian prisoners, the U.S. chief of international monitors said Sunday.

Asked by Reuters if the elease of detainees by both sides Saturday was a sign the Serbian province had turned a corner in the search for peace, William Walker, chief of mission for the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) said: "I wish it were, (but) I don't think so. It's not only a concern, it's a fear that we'll probably have more of this (violence, polincal kidnapping). I hope I'm wrong."

Walker, an American, said a resumption of tit-for-tat kidnappings and attacks by Serbs and ethnic Albanians in Kosovo was a big concern of

Walker left Kosovo's capital, Pristina, Sunday for OSCE's Vienna headouarters to report on a tumultuous 10 days in Kosovo that saw him black-listed by Belgrade and then granted a reprieve even as NATO warned Belgrade of possible air strikes. The latest round of disturbances in this southern Serb province began on Jan. 15th when the bodies of 45 ethnic Albanians, in civilian clothes, were discovered in the village of Racak after government forces swept the area.

Walker described the scene as a "massacre" and blamed the government side.

Belgrade angrily disputed his statement, saying they had been killed in a firefight between government troops and separatist rebels and the bodies then arranged to suggest a massacre.

OSCE previously had arranged the release of eight Yugoslav army soldiers capnired by the Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA), an ethnic Albanian guerrilla force fighting for independence.

Walker acknowledged that the OSCE's mission was a fragile firebreak against a wider conflagration unless and until the warring parties subscribed to a political process that could sort out their differences.

MULDA, Germany (R) — Left-wing demonstrators try-ing to disrupt a rally hy Germany's far-right NPD party clashed with police in the eastern town of Mulda Saturday evening, police said. At least one demonstrator was injured in the scuffles in Mulda, a small town of 1,400 south of Dresden. At least one car was damaged by hurled rocks and three people were detained. About 600 protesters had gathered outside a village concert hall where about 200 members of the far-right National Democratic Party was holding a party congress. There were several hundred police in the village to prevent the left-wing demonstrators clashing with members of the NPD, a party which security officials say numbers convicted neo-Nazis and skinhead thugs in its ranks. Thursday, unknown assailants had set fire to the hall, causing extensive damage. Separately, the magazine Focus said Germany's anti-extremism watchdog, the Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution, had caught a 17-year-old who was feeding outlawed Nazi propaganda into the Internet. The youth had set up a homepage called "Der arische Ansturm" (The Aryan Onslaught) that was filled with racist propaganda as well as instructions on how to make a bomb. The magazine said police had found considerable amounts of explosives in his apartment.

French army officers rescued from South Pole after feat

PARIS (AFP) - Five French army officers who skied their way to the South Pole were rescued overnight after being stranded there since their arrival Jan. 9 due to had weather. A plane flew in to recover the group and take them to Patriot Hills, a base used for Antarctic expeditions. From there, they will take another flight to Punta Arenas, Chile, at the beginning of the week, before flying home to France. The five men, part of an elite mountain unit in the French army, camped out at the South Pole in two tents while waiting for weather conditions to improve so the rescue plane could land. They set off for their 1,350-kilometre journey across the Antarctic ice cap on Nov. 21 from Gould Bay, near Berkner Island and covered some 30 kilometres per day. With each man towing a 130-kilogramme sledge, they skied for nearly nine hours daily in temperatures of between minus 15 and minus 25 degrees Celsius. Four of them undertook a similar expedition to the North Pole in 1996 and three of them climbed Mount Everest in 1997. The aim of the South Pole trip was to increase the personal experience of the group and test new equipment, including army underwear and rations, according to the army information service.

Candidacy rows rock Nigerian parties amid presidential race

LAGOS (AFP) - Splits ment insisting that the have appeared in Nigeria's second largest party, while conservatives in the north bave threatened a disruptive entry into the country's presidential race, just over a month before elections.

The centre-right All Peoples Party (APP), which came second in state elections held earlier this month, is split over plans for an electoral pact the presidential elections slated for Feb. 27, a top party official admitted Sunday.

The leaders of the APP agreed earlier this month to team up for the presidential elections, presenting a joint candidate with the region-Alliance for Democracy (AD1.

But last week the AD made clear that, though smaller than the centreright party, it expected to be allowed to produce the alliance's candidate for president.

And Friday, five leading members of the APP, all hopefuls for the APP ticket to lead Africa's most populous country, issued a statealliance's candidate must come from the APP.

The APP is now saying that as a senior partner in the alliance, there is no way the APP as a party can accept that the AD should produce the presidential candidate," said newspaper publisher Emmanuel Iwanyanwu, a spokesman for the five.

"The APP will definitely not accept that," he added. The problem for other leaders in the APP is that to secure the support of the Yoruba-based AD, which most analysts believe would be vital for the APP to stand a chance of winning in the elections, centre-left

Democratic Party (PDP).

The problems were to be discussed Sunday and Monday and he expected them to be resolved soon, he said.

Meanwhile, a conservative northern group meeting in Kaduna at the weekend threatened a divisive entry into the election race saying it would back a northern candidate in a challenge to southern demands that the south at last produce a president.

"In about a week's time, a prominent son from the north will declare his interest for the presidency," the group, the Northern Elders Forum, said in a statement a copy of which was received by AFP Sunday.

The group said the debate among southern politicians about who should stand for the presidency "is already developing into a crisis situation."

To resolve this, it said it would back the northern candidate.

conservative Nigeria's northern elite has dominated the country since independence in 1960 and in 1993, the election of a southern tyeoon and politician, Moshood Abiola, was overturned by the northernled military, enflaming passions in his native southwest.

Since then, a consensus has grown that the three registered parties must accept demands that the south produce the next president.

Joseph Wayas, a leading member of the forum who opposed the northern body's decision, warned Sunday that it risked plunging Nigeria into "crisis" by infuriating the already tense south.

"We should equally not forget what brought us to this stage of political crisis," he said, referring to the annulment of the 1993 elections. "We should not forger that we may precipitate another crisis, similar to the June 12 (1993) crisis." he said.

The deadline for nominations for the Feb. 27 election is Feb. 12. Up to 53 million people are expected to vote.

It was not immediately clear if he was connected with the uttinch.

An AFP correspondent reported that police came under fire when they broke up clashes between ANC and UDM supporters on a road dividing the rival townships of Ndaleni and Nkabinde's stronghold of Mogoda early Sunday.

No casualties were reported. Bloody feuding between UDM and ANC factions resulted in more than 100 killings in terror attacks in the Richmond townships last year, leading to fears of massive destablisation in the tin-derbox province during the campaign for the elections.

ANC provincial leader Bheki Cele said survivors had told him the gunmen had shouled "you killed our leader and brother before they opened fire — an apparent reference to Nkabinde's assassinaion.

Cele said the ANC was angered by the police response to Saturday's massiere, saying police were called just after the shootings, but arrived two hours later.

"It is of no use to tell the people to remain calm when they know that police will not do anything to protect them from another attack," he said.

Nkabinde, the local leader of the UDM and its national general secretary, was gunned down on Saturday morning. The region's most feared poliucian, Nkabinde was acquitted last year of 16 charges of murder — for lack of evidence -- though ANC leaders considered him a warford and behind much of the violence in the province, where politically motivated killings are rife.

His organisational skills and intimidatory tacties were credited with giving the fledgling UDM a foothold in KwaZiilu-Natal, previously the scene of a bloody low-level civil war between the ANC and the Inkatha Freedom Pany.

Nationally, a recent opinion pull gave the UDM only three per cent of voters' support, trailing behind four other par-

2-day weekend?

THE CABINET on Saturday took up the issue once again of a two-day weekend after preparing the groundwork by soliciting a set of related proposals and counterproposals. The issue has long been under consideration, with submissions for and against it appearing about equal. There are obviously strong arguments in favour of an extended weekend and equally persuasive arguments against it. There are already several institutions which observe the two-day weekend, and the results of this practice must have been available to the government. Universities and schools follow a two-day weekend, while the government enjoys a one-and-a-half-day weekend.

The major considerations in deciding whether or not to opt for an extended weekend remain the same: Which of two days to choose, and what will be the economic and social impact of Jordan taking two days off per week. How will the country's high rate of unemployment be affected. Jordan's contacts with the outside world, be they with Arab countries or foreign nations, is a factor that has bounced back and forth with no resolution. Most countries following a two-day weekend make available abundant recreational and cultural facilities that people can avail themselves of so that a weekend is what it should be a time for rest, relaxation and enjoyment.

That so much time has already been invested in studying the issue certainly indicates that Jordan's move to two days off per week is inevitable. Wouldn't more time devoted to development of public recreational and cultural facilities for adults and children be time better spent?

ARABIC PRESS COMMENTARIES

Al Ra'i's Ahmad Musleh said that yesterday's Arab foreign ministers' meeting became possible only after a series of preparatory meetings in Cairo, talks between the Arah League secretary general and the Iraqi foreign minister and a number of contacts and visits from other officials, all of which revealed how important the meeting was. A unified official Arab stand to answer the Arab Nation's questions about its present and future is a must, especially with Israel ignoring the peace process and the Iraq crisis, he said. However, the writer added, although sixteen Arab countries agreed to the conference, the event was delayed because of criticisms concentrating on the preparations in order to ensure the meeting's success.

Al Dustour's Ahmad Hesban said that more than 1 million cubic metres of freshwater, considered to be of the highest quality in the world, is currently being used to irrigate 100,000 dunums rented by four companies in the south of Jordan. Although the Kingdom is in need of drinking water, it is obvious that certain agricultural firms are abusing huge amounts of water to produce a few crops: crops which could be imported for a cost much lower than the cost of the water used for irrigation, Hesban claimed. According to the writer, although, the licences given to the companies stipulated that they only be allowed to produce wheat and fodder as well as breed livestock to produce meat, the companies are currently producing potatoes, apples and other crops. Thus, in order to protect the scarce resource of water, the government now has the right to cancel the licences and end this abuse of water, as the companies are no longer operating in accordance with the terms of the licences, said Heshan.

Privatising the private sector economics professor and former prime minister of Egypt made the observation that the private sector in Egypt, because of the prevalent family business approach to ownership, was not contributing sufficiently toward the growth of the Egyptian economy. He noted that family businesses have been diversifying into husiness activiries that are totally unrelated to Jordan as well. their original economic activity. For example, manufacturing firms owned by families diversified into real estate investment through hank loans secured sometimes through family ownership or family presence at the board of directors of the lending institute. His complaint was that such activities were not increasing the exports of the nation and thus did not contribute sufficiently toward the

A privatisation expert made a similar remark almost two years ago about the private sector in Jordan. He prohably did not mean exactly what Dr. Lutfi observed but he was actually referring to the prevalence of monopolistic pracnices in the economy. Yet, upon close examination the Jordanian economy suffers from the same malady. Empirical research by Professor Nasim Barham of Professor Nasim Barham

RECENTLY, DR. ALI Lutfi. an University of Jordan on the profile of the Jordanian entrepreneur noted that families in Jordan tend to behave as conglomerates and wander off into completely unrelated business endeavours. A venture capital expert made the remark that the "families" also own some of the banks that tend to lend to their ventures. Therefore, the statement of Dr. Lutfi fits

Families have more incentive than single investors to go the conglomerate way. For one thing, the family, unlike the single entrepreneur, seeks managerial employment opportunities for most of its memhers to ensure the loyalty of the agent (operator). Having one husiness means one top joh and many middle positions that can be staffed hy professionals. Therefore, a family-style investment tends to be diversified. Second, families behave as a riskaverse stockbroker in order to satisfy the whims of their many lead-

Third, most family investments arise from agrarian or nomadic societies where the clan is tradirionally the employer, protector, and banker: continuing the tradition is easy as witnessed in the case of many of the Jordanian families who moved from being powerful clans to business clans that deal internally and unite against competitors who also come with their own form of family investments. In addition, conglomerates may arise because of an inherent belief that the economy is unstable and the best way of doing business is to grab whatever opportunities come one's way. such as supplying a government contract or satisfying a bid or riding a real estate investment craze.

Furthermore, the lack of specialisation and actual competition from domestic or foreign firms make it easy to enter into different markets without specialised capital, labour, management skills or know-how; thus making diversification not only costless but also

Nevertheless, why is this wandering so bad? Alternatively, as bright young student at Al Hashemiah University noted after a lecture on competitiveness, "Does not investment theory prescribe portfolio diversification in order to reduce risk?" Investment theory actually prescribes that one does not put all the eggs in one basket - that is how the father of this theory (the Capital Asset Pricing Model) James Tobin described it on the eve of being

Prize for its development. However, there are two caveats that one should be aware of: the portfolio approach while reducing the possibility of bankruptcy always generates less profits, and it applies only to investments in stocks, not direct investment. So on the outset, going the conglomerate way generates fewer profits. Moreover, this approach, when applied to the creation of unrelated businesses, reduces the possibility of creating value added as huge investments go the horizontal route creating low value added, less competitive products that can barely compete in a protected environment never mind the global village. High tech, know-bow intensive products made more efficiently in Jordan than elsewhere are what brings about a competitive advantage to the economy. On the other hand investment funds that are wasted on many small unrelated ventures tend to create very little value added and do not make for quality or high standard products that can be exported to wealthy, stable non-regional markets.

Good antitrust legislation can lead to the removal of many of the monopolistic practices of the family conglomerates. But this is not enough to stop the growth of such managerial structures. Other changes must take place such as opening the domestic market which guarantees that local monopoly profits are diminished and spurs investors to increase value added; prohibition of cross subsidies from own-banking ventures to own-business firms; and improving standards and encour-. aging the adoption of high standards to encourage the creation of strategic management and planning by firms. This recipe will lead to the creation of singular highly specialised firms that are publicly held companies. It need not be carried out by the public sector: privatisation of the private sector is an imminent market reality that will soon close in.

This flawed peace between the Palestinians and Israel

By Pascal B. Karmy

WHEN THE Oslo accord was published to the world after long secret negotiations between the Palestinians and the Israelis in Oslo with the mediation of Norway, I wrote an article about it in the Jordan Times, September 20, 1993. In that article, I described the advantages and disadvantages of the accord and stated among other things the following: "It cannot, however, be denied that there are some negative elements in the agreement as far as the Palestinians and the Arabs are concerned. Those elements concern the question of Jerusalem, the settlements and the refugees which will be negotiated at the heginning of the third year of the interim period (see article V of the accord and article IV of the Annexes under the title "specific understandings and agreements"). There are no specific indications on what basis negotiations will be undertaken."
I also stated: "If no deal is concluded now with Israel the latter will in five or ten years, fill the occupied territory with settlements to a degree that there will be no territory to negotiate about and the Palestinians will be choked and hecome at best 'carriers of water and hewers of wood' to the Jews or at worst they will he forced out of their homes. This indeed was the Likud policy when it was in power and it had reluctantly started negotiations under U.S. pressure but with the intention of dragging the negotiations, as frankly admitted by Shamir (after his resignation), so as to over-whelm the occupied territories with more settlements."

Dr. Hanan Ashrawi, one of the chief Palestinian negotiators in Madrid and Washington prior to the Oslo accord of which she almost knew nothing, wrote in her book titled "This Side of Peace" published in 1995, the following addressing Mahmoud Abbas (Abu Mazen): "It is clear that the ones who initialled this agreement have not lived under occupation. You sion did not prevent Israel from postponed the settlements issue and Jerusalem without even getting guarantees that Israel would not continue to create facts on the ground that would pre-empt and prejudge the final outcome."

Abu Mazen answered: "All these will he negotiated. We got strategic political gains, particularly the fact that this is an agreement with the PLO and not just a Palestinian delegation and the recognition of the Palestinians as a people with political rights."

Dr. Ashrawi retorted that: "My main concern is about substance. I think the agreement has many potentially explosive areas and could he to our disadvantage. At least you should have done something about Jerusalem, the settlements and human rights. Strategic issues are fine, but we know the Israelis and we know that they will exploit their power as occupier to the hilt, and hy the time you get to permanent status. Israel would bave permanently altered realities on the Abu Mazen answered: "You can negotiate settlements and human rights. Talk to them directly in Washington and ask for a freeze on settlement activities, the release of prisoners. the lifting of the Jerusalem siege and the return of the

Dr. Ashrawi was amazed and answered: "After you had signed? What power do we have? Do you want me to talk to the Israelis as a petitioner?"

What I am driving at from the above quotations is to show that one of the main defects in the Oslo accord and even in the subsequent accords including the Wye River accord of October 23, 1998, is that there exists no mention at all about stopping settlements building or having them stalled until the final status negotiations. There is one provision in the Oslo accord of 1993 to the effect that no party shall take any action which pre-empts the final status negotiations. But this provi-

building settlements until this day. The argument by Ahu Mazen that the settlements' issue (together with Jerusalem, the refugees and the boundaries) could be negotiated does not hold water as Israel. despite the Palestinian National Authority's incessant protests, has continued to enlarge old settlements and construct new ones. It has thus built a settlement in Ras Al Amoud, the heart of the Arab part of Jerusalem, and is on the verge of building settlements in Abu Ghneim in the east part of Jerusalem, let alone others spread across the West Bank after confiscation

Palestinian Iands. It is indeed amazing, as Dr. Ashrawi writes, that the settlements' issue was not seriously tackled by Arafat in all the negotiations with the Israelis. I agree with Dr. Ashrawi when she says in her above-quoted book: "It would be wrong and misleading to try to beautify such a flawed agreement and to embellish it in such a way as to create exaggerated expectations. It certainly was not the answer to our prayers nor an airtight or comprehensive agreement capable of easy implementation. Time has shown that Dr. Ashrawi was deadly right.

Welcome back

To the Editor:

I AM a Jordanian woman living in Austin, Texas. I can't describe my feelings when I saw His Majesty's return, the Royal family waiting for him. I was so happy. and the feeling was so overwhelming that I wished, I was there to welcome him in person. Maybe I am just an ordinary woman, but His Majesty's gestures makes every one of us, every Jordanian, and every Arab feel special. So on behalf of my family in Jordan and my family in the States I want to wish His Majesty all the best and happy return.

The Arab male mind

I AM a Jordanian-born female currently residing in-Sydney, where I have lived for the past 12 years. I recently came across numerous articles, particularly in TIME magazine discussing "honour killings" in Jordan. The articles became of interest to me, as they discussed how traditional male thinking of Arabs and Jordanians has not changed. The articles further went on to discuss the crimes committed against women that fell under the category of honour killings, and how the Jordanian legal system often condones the increasing number of these

I found it particularly interesting as such Arab male thinking is no different when living in a Western culture. The practice of 'psychological oppression' continues and acts as a reminder to females, that if we wander astray from our traditions, consequences will be deadly

Lubna Haddad

To the women of Jordan:

To the Editor:

I SAW the 20/20 show on TV yesterday on CNN about honour killings of family members, young women killed by their brothers and fathers. God bless the women of Jordan and may they one day be free from this horrible outdated custom.

Action is needed now!

To the Editor:

FIRST OF all, my congratulations to Rana Husseini on her courage and steadfastness in bringing crimes against Jordanian women to light.

It was with a combination of shock, sorrow and disgus that we watched in horror one news report after another about the so-called "Honour Killings" in Jordan. The next day at work people, knowing that I lived in Jordan for seven years, bombarded me with questions regarding the horrific subject. Frankly, I am speechless! First of all, I had never heard of it while we lived there ('82-'89). Was I so out of touch that I missed it or was it done "behind closed doors' back then? Secondly, I don't know what I find most repulsive: the way male relatives murder their own sisters in cold blood or the government's indifference to the problem! I almost fell out of my chair when I heard that women, who fear their male relatives, VICTIMS are put in jail by the Jordanian government for safety. Excisine! That is the most pathetic and absurd thing I have been all I'd like to know why the international human right organisations are turning a deaf ear on these desperations.

Talking and writing about this arrocity is a good start, in I believe that action to start treating and judging the wise who commit these crimes as the first degree MURDES. ERS that they are, as well as to PROTECT the victims they DESERVE to be protected, is needed AS SOON POSSIBLE.

THE SITE of Tell el-'Umayri actually comprises three different tells. located within about 250 metres of one another. The main excavated site is the western tell, the largest of the three (some seven hectares) and the one closest to the ancient local water source. It is located immediately west of the airport highway, eleven kilometres south of the Seventh Circle in Amman. It is slightly higher than the other two tells, its summit being some 60 metres above the wadi bed, and 900 metres above sea level.

Across the highway from the main tell is a smaller site known as el-'Umayri East, with trees and wall lines clearly visible on it as one drives by it on the airport highway. This is the site of the Classical period settlement, with Hellenistic, Roman and Byzantine remains, but it has never beeo excavated. A survey in 1994 identified 43 different ancient features on 'Umayri East, including 11 cisterns, 22 caves, ten quarries, mosaic floor remains, a Byzantine cross carved on a stone, and coins dating from the Umayyad and Ottoman periods. A 94-metre-long north-south wall and a 62-metre-long east-west wall on the hill seem to be receot constructions.

The third tell is 'Umayri North, located east of the highway, north of the Classical site, and north-east of the main site. It is the latest of the three in terms of settlement, having been used primarily in the Islamic period, according to pottery and coin evidence collected from the surface. It has never been excavated.

Regional Survey

The hinterland survey of an area of five kilometres radius around Tell elindicating the archaeological wealth of this area that is now being heavily and rapidly built up. Among the ancient sites were roads, houses. towns and villages, wine presses, cistems, caves, lime kilns, watchtowers and forts — spanning the entire known history of humankind, from the Stone Age to the Islamic era. The survey was directed by Dr. Sten LaBianca of Andrews University. assisted initially by the late Robert G. Boling, and subsequently by Randall W. Younker and Gary L. Christopherson. The hinterland surveying sought to undertake a controlled comparison of food system cycles in the 'Umayri region with those already documented around Hisban, LaBianca said in a receot interview. "This was a new type of survey using random sampling methods, along with traditional approaches. Special attention was focused on evidence of change over time io food production practices and related settlement patterns." he explained. The survey consisted of several teams, including an environmental survey team; a random survey team; a site survey team: a seasonal site survey team; a tomb survey team; an ethnoarchaeology team; and a water resources survey team, which were not all fielded during the same sea-

The picture that enterges from the survey evidence is of a region of numerous farming estates that concentrated on growing grains and fruits tparticularly grapes for wine production). Among the ancient farming technologies that have been documented are dams and embankments along the bottoms of wadis in order to minimise erosion and maximise the retention of groundwater for dryland cultivation - a practice that contempurary farmers are starting to employ again. Among the significant results of the regional survey, according to LaBianca, was that "pottery from the Roman and Byzantine periods, and to a lesser extent from the Iron Age 11, was found on the surface of the ground throughout the entire project area, even in fields and hillsides."

This reflects the findings of other surveys in adjacent areas that show these to have been the ancient periods of most intensive human activity. The survey identified four general categories of buildings that were found throughout the survey area during the periods of heaviest human use: agricultural field shelters or 'towers', small farmsteads, larger agricultural complexes or 'estates' Isuch as Rujm Salim, described below), and forts (such as ed-Dreijat).

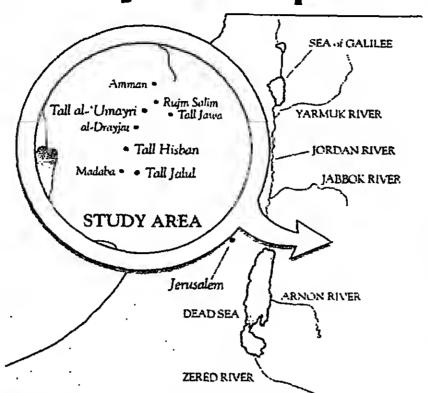

The common agricultural field shelters or 'towers' are 3-5-metresquare or rectangular solitary facilities located well away from the main farmsteads, and always associated with agricultural terraces and/or field walls. They probably provided temporary shelter for farmers or workers during critical seasons, when the crops had to be carefully watched or protected.

The larger field 'towers' (3x3 to 6x7 metres) were usually associated with facilities for cultivating, storing, preparing or processing foodstuffs, including wine presses, millstones, field walls, and caves. They usually were located on spurs of hills overlooking good agricultural fields and vineyards, and probably were used primarily as watchtowers and farm-

Such a facility is perhaps described in the biblical passage of Isaiah 5:1-7: "My beloved had a vineyard on a very fruitful hill. As he dug it and cleared it of stones, and planted it with choice vines, he built a watchtower in the midst of it, and hewed out a wine vat in it..." Most of these agricultural facilities described in the Isaiah passage were found throughout the survey area, including stone piles from field cleaning, wine presses, enclosure walls, and towers, said Dr. Larry Herr of Canadian University

Ed-Dreilat Excavation

One of the outlying sites that the MPP team excavated was a hilltop settlement called Ed-Dreijut, located oearly two kilometres to the southwest of Umayri itself. Its hillton location with fine views in all directions suggested that it was an Iron Age military fortress or tower: the excavations confirmed its early life as a fort in the Iron II period, but also revealed a more complex history spanning several periods. Excavations revealed that the main rectangu-

Map of the study area

lar structure had walls measuring some 2.5-metres thick, built of massive chert boulders measuring over two nieters long in some cases. The oldest use was during the Iron II period, when it seems to have protected the surrounding furning region. The site was cleared to bedrock and rebuilt in the Late Persian/Hellenistic era as a complex that included domestic quarters and agricultural processing facilities. Some of the architectural changes included new basements carved into the bedrock, and caves tunnelled beneath the fortress for storage of water and food.

The structure was again remodelled during its use in the Late Hellenistic and Roman periods, and pot-shards from the Byzantine period may reflect the site's use for agricultural purposes. Light pottery remains suggest perhaps only seasonal use in the Avyubid-Mamluke era, according to Dr. Randall Younker of Andrews University, who directed these exca-

Rujm Salim

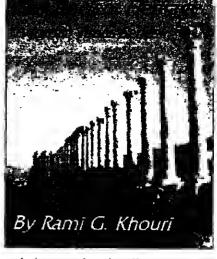

Another of the sites discovered during the regional survey and subsequently excavated was a large farmstead or estate called Rujm Salim, over two kilometres north-east of Tell el- Umayri. It comprised a tower-like central building nearly nine meters supare and made of megalithic stones, along with terraces, enclosute walls, cisterns, wine presses, caves, 'out' buildings near the main structure, 'roads' among the agricultural fields, and other structures. An ancient proper road passes nearby.

This facility seems to have been built around the 6th-5th century BC, when it probably served as some sort of managerial complex to oversee the vineyards and wine production in the region. Another similar site was excavated some two kilometres south of Tell el-'Umayri, Among the objects found at Ruint Salim that indicated that it and other similar sites were more than just large farmsteads were many fragments of jewellery and figurines, a scarabold seal, and two stamp seals. One of the interesting tinds from Rujm Salim was a deliberately defaced bronze coin from the 3rd century BC, during the structure's second period of use in the Hellenistic era. Rujm Miriam is a fourth survey site that was excavated to reveal a food production and processing facility overlooking the upper reaches of the Wadi Bunayat. This farmstead comprised a central house surrounded by a courtyard, walls, and terraces. It was built, used and abandoned during the Hellenistic period (332-63 BC), and may have served primarily as a collection point for agricultural pro-

Work on tombs

The regional survey identified numerous tomb remains in the vicinity of Tell el-'Umayri, with 42 survey sites howing the tem isolated burials. Of these, 30 sites had Roman-Byzantine remains. Several cemeteries or individual tombs have been excavated or cleared, revealing well preserved burials from the Early Bronze Age IV period (c. 2300-2000) BC), including shaft tombs and cistern-shaped installations.

The excavations of one cemetery two kilometres from the tell showed that the people were buried with funerary objects such as four-spouted lamps, jugs, bronze daggers, and spindle whorls - perhaps standard requirements for a safe journey through the next life in the late 3rd millennium BC. Cistern-like structures adjacem to the shaft tombs had EBIV and Middle Bronze IIA materials. Project members have hypothesised that a settlement was located nearby, or — because the disterns were located aniidst the tombs - that the cemetery itself was a seasonal campsite and settlement for pastoralists who returned bere regularly to bury their dead. The survey of the 'conjetery' area, measuring 500 x 400 metres, revealed twice as many cisiern-shaped features as tombs, suggesting that it would be inaccurate to designate this primarily as a cemetery, according to Douglas R. Clark of Walla Walla College, and an MPP co-director.

These are among the richest funerary remains from this period excavated anywhere in the southern Levant. according to Gary Christopherson and Boguslav Dabrowsi, who have made a separate analysis of the tomb

Along with the dolmen that was excavated on the south slope of the tell, the project also identified on the south-eastern slope a hewn cave or tomb with a stepped entrance, dating from the Middle Bronze IIC period t1650-1550 BC1. This tomb would have been used by the people who first built the massive fortifications at the hilltop town. It housed 15 articulated skeletons, including one placed in a nicbe and four children. Typical funerary objects were platters, cari-

nated bowls, jugs, juglets, and lamps. The environmental survey tocused on documenting the land use strategies of Roman and Byzantine era inhabitants of Wadi Bishara, about two kilonietres west of the tell. Among the features studied were earth embankments set perpendicular to the wadi bottom, terraces that rose from the wadi, and diversion dams and embankments on smaller tributaries - some of which were being revived by farmers today. "When this ancient system was at its peak," LaBiance said, "the wedi and the surrounding slopes could have produced ten times as much vegetables and fruits as are being grown today."

studies contemporary human lifestyles and beliefs in order to illuminate the past. It has sought to document the reasons why households and villages made the decision to become sedentary or nomadic. Interviews with three groups of local resi dents ('Ajarmeh natives, Christians who came here a century ago, and recently arrived Palestinians) have identified some of the reasons for this changing lifestyle. These include shifting from tent homes in summer to warmer caves or houses in wimer; simultaneously cultivating crops and herding animals on tribal lands separately dedicated for each purpose; the existence of a range of families, within a tribe, on the continuum from sedentary to fully noniadic; and, thexible tribal norms that allow members to be included or excluded, as circumstances demand.

The work at Tell el-'Uniayri and associated sites in the Madaba Plains Project (MPP) is continuing, with excavations taking place every other summer. The MPP is spousored by Andrews University (Michigan, USA), in consortium with Canadian University College, LaSierra University, and Walla Walla College. The Tell el-'Umayri Project is directed by Larry G. Herr, Douglas R. Clark, and Warten C. Trenchard, with LaSierra University President and former MPP director Lawrence Geraty acting as

Analysts: Collapse of the Japanese yen just a question of time

Japan, whether it wants to or not. must soon admit that the only way to stem deflation is to print a huge amount of money and cause an inevitable collapse in the yen, economists say

How far could the Japanese currency fall? "250 yen to the dollar." said Takeshi Fujimaki. head of the Tokvo branch of Morgan Guaranty Trust Co.

Fujimaki admits this level, which would he the lowest for more than 15 years, is an extreme prediction.

On the markets, forecasts are more moderate. These say that the yen, now trading around 113 to the dollar, will likely stay strong until the end of March, the close of the Japanese fiscal year, before sliding down towards 140 to the dollar,

Nevertheless economists admit the describes is plausible. At the heart of this bleak prediction is the dramatic collapse in

Iranian currency hits new low

TEHRAN (AFP) - Iranian rival sharply fell against major foreign currencies on the illegal open market Sunday amid a deepening economic recession.

The rival dropped from 7,200 to the dollar on Saturday to 7,500 mid-Sunday. although it recovered to 7,400 later in the day.

Money exchangers dealing on the black market in the streets appeared nervous and reluctant to trade in large sums because of the fluctuarions.

Iran banned the open exchange market four years ago in an effort to prevent the collapse of the riyal against major foreign currencies.

The government maintains three official exchange rates of 1,750, 3.000 and 5,700 riyals to the dollar respectively for state transactions. licensed exporters and some travellers authorised to receive hard currency.

But the riyal has hovered around 7,000 to the dollar on the free market since last November with a gradual loss in value in the past

Its fall has been linked to the economic crisis prompted by plummeting oil prices on the international market.

Iran, which earns the bulk of its hard currency from oil exports, faces a $6 hillion budget deficit this fiscal year. which ends on March 20.

Meanwhile, officials said Sunday that income from Iran's non-oil exports has dropped hy seven per cent in the past nine months despite efforts to revive alternative sectors to make up for falling revenues from oil sales.

Iran's Exports Promotion Centre (IEPC) said around $22 billion worth of non-oil goods had been exported between March and December 1998 against $2.4 billion for the same period the year before. Despite the seven per cent fall in value, the volume of goods exported in the past nine months rose hy 34 per cent, it said, adding that the discrepancy could be explained by the "dramatic fall" in prices of Iranian goods on international mar-

Despite the overall decline in the value of non-oil exports in the past nine months, such exports registered a steady growth towards the end of the period, IEPC said.

Iraq puts price tag of $140 billion on lost earnings from oil exports

Iraq has lost almost $140 billion because of the U.N. embargo in force since August 1990. Commerce Minis-ter Mohammad Mehdi Saleh said Sunday.

Saleh, after a meeting with a Spanish delegation, told journalists that the estimate was based on lost earnings from oil exports.

Iraq, however, has been authorised to sell a fixed value of crude to finance imports of food and medicine, under a "oil-for-food" launched in accord December 1996.

But Saleh said the accord was "not being implemented as agreed" with the United Nations. Iraq has so far received only 20 per cent of its food deals and two per cent of medical contracts from the fourth six-monthly phase of the accord that ended in late November. he said.

The minister accused the United States of using the U.N. Sanctions Committee to "veto" Iraqi contracts with foreign suppliers. Baghdad will step up its economic cooperation with countries which adopted "a positive attitude toward it." Saleh said, hoping that ties with Madrid would "return to their level of hefore the embargo."

139-member Spanish delegation. comprising 35 political and trade union groups. was on a visit to Baghdad as part of a com-paign to lift the sanctions in force since Iraq invaded Kuwait more than eight years ago. Meanwhile, a former

Israeli energy minister was quoted as saying in Sunday's Haaretz newsspurned an offer from Iraq to sell it oil at 50 per cent off market prices.

Moshe Shahal, who served as energy minister under Israel's previous Lahour government and is now a corporate lawyer, said he was approached several weeks ago by a Palestinian intermediary over the oil offer.

Shahal said that the next day an Iraqi businessman active in Jordan contacted him with

The stock exchange is still suffering from shortage of liquidity despite improvement of indicators

 DESPITE SOME improvement in the indicators of the stnck market, known as the Amman Financial Market (AFM), the hourse still suffers from low liquidity, the AFM's deputy director-general said in a working paper he presented to a conference held recently at the Yarmnuk University in Irhid. He pointed ont that the turnover ratio bave declined to around 10 per cent after peaking at 86.2 per cent in 1992 and standing at about 50 per cent in 1989, noting that the depth of the market and its liquidity are considered among the important factors that influence decisions for investment in the Jald Tareef, the senior AFM official. wrole that the supply of shares, especially the "free float" shares has an important effect on the market development through providing more depth and liquidity in the market and coabling it to carry out the role of attracting foreign investments which flow mostly to countries outside this regino. "Despite the existence of Arab financial markets having a market value of around JD150 billion, these markets were not able to attract adequate foreign investments," he said.

Tareef added that within this framework, it is imperative to expand the sale of sbares owned by the government to iocrease the supply of shares. especially the free float shares. Moreover, be said, it is imperative to expedite the privatisation programmes and to remove the restrictions and barriers or ceilings facing investment.

In his working paper, the deputy director general said the AFM has depended on shares as a main trading tool since it was established whereas stocks received less attention whether in terms of trading volume or their interest to investors. However, Tareef indicated that since the new companies law was issued in 1997, the stock market witnessed encouraging results as the volume of government honds and other dehentures issued until October amounted to JD53.5 million. "It is expected that this activity would encourage another number of companies to resort to such tools to finance their future projects," Tareef said.

Noting that the stock exchange has continued to implement the agreement signed with the Paris Bourse and the French depository centre for modernising the trading mechanism and setting up a depository and transfer centre. Tareef expected trading to be conducted electronically by the end of this year. He explained that the shares of companies will be gradually traded electronically and that this change will have a major positive effect on the efficiency and security of trading and, consequently will enhance confidence in the securities market. Within the process of mechanising the operations of the AFM and the depository and transfer centre, a special building was rented to serve as a temporary site for the Amman Bourse

Philippoussis picks Enqvist-Agassi final

MELBOURNE (AFP) — Sweden's Thomas Enqvist underlined his claim to the Australian Open title with a compelling five-set win over Mark Philippoussis here Sunday.

The unseeded Enqvist, who knocked out U.S. Open champion Pat Rafter io the third round, triumphed 6-2, 6-4, 6-7 (3/7), 4-6, 6-2 over the 14th seeded Philippoussis.

Philippousis later said only fifth seeded Andre Agassi could prevent Enqvist from winning the

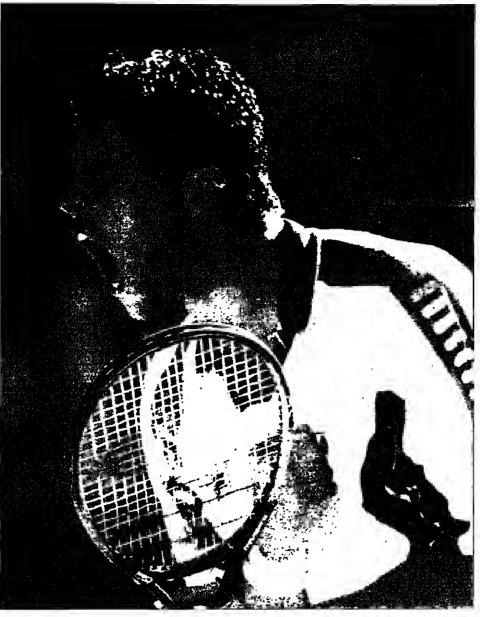

"I can't see anyone hurting Thomas except for Aodre," said Australia's last hope for tournament. Eoqvist and Agassi look now as if they could meet in next Sunday's final.

Only four men's seeds — Agassi (5), Karol Kucera (7). Yevgeny Kafelnikov (10) and Todd Martin (15) - qualified for the quarter-fioals after an opening week which saw defending champion Petr Korda dumped out in the third round.

Korda returns to the Czech Republic a chastened man with his career in doubt after beiog dragged through grinder over a steroid test be failed at last year's Wimhledon.

which dipped narrowly over Schmeichel's har.

Right on half-time Jamie Redknapp showed persistence down the left and Czech international Patrik Berger brought a smart ing shot from 30 metres at United's Great Dane as the visitors finished the half well on top.

United came out bristling after the interval and Ryan Giggs almost poached an equaliser within five minmes after David Beckham's

Gerard Houllier's side were lucky on the hour when Keane's 18-metre drive deflected agonisingly past James' post.

Fowler casually lost possession five minutes later and United's Andy Cole saw his shot on the turn deflected over the bar by Jamie Carragher, United brought on Paul Scholes to add some craft up front and Liverpool were again fortunate when Gary Neville's cross was sliced straight at his own gnalleeper by Liverpool defender Dominie Matteo.

Keane was once again left cursing his linek after 80 minutes when his 15-metre effort cannoned off James' right-hand post white Fowler should have done better at the other end from substitute Jason McAteer's late cross.

Ferguson threw on supersub Solksjaer as his fast reson and United finally claimed their equatiser two minutes from time. Cote headed Beekhant's freekick into the path of Yorke, who couldn't miss his 17th goal of the season.

Then, with a replay looking inevitable. Solskjaer lashed in a low near post effort after Scholes had controlled the ball in the area Fowler also missed a good and United, somehow, were chance for Liverpool at the other end soon after but through.

Arafat may consider delaying statehood declaration — officials

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM on condition of anonymity. (R) — Yasser Arafat would consider delaying a statehood declaration if the European Union (EU) and the United States recognise a Palestinian state and Israel meets certain conditions, Palestinian officials said on Sunday.

They said representatives of the 15-nation EU have recentmet discreetly with Palestinian officials and sug- commitment to accept Dec. 31 gested Arafat postpone declaration of a state from May to an unspecified date.

Arafat has said that he reserves the right to proclaim an independent state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip on May 4, when a five-year interim period for negotiating a permanent settlement with Israel expires under the Oslo accords. "Arafat is willing to consider delaying a Palestinian state until December this year if the EU and the U.S. recognise the state, and if Israel meets certain Palestinian demands," said a Palestinian official, who spoke

These demands include freezing Jewish settlement building. on occupied

Palestinian land and implementing the Wye River deal," the official said, referring to the land-for-security signed in October and which Israel suspended last month.

In addition, the official said, Arafat wanted an international as the new deadline to conclude the interim deals signed with Israel.

"If we have international commitments to accept a new date such as Dec. 31, then we would delay. If we don't have a deal with Israel by then, we then have the right to declare a state that should be recognised by the world," another official

A senior EU delegation plans to hold talks with the Palestinian president next week in Europe on a comprehensive proposal in return for putting off a unilateral declara-tion, Palestinian officials said.

President Bill Clinton in Washington in the first week of February to discuss the peace process, the officials said.

They said Egypt would contact the EU on the Palestinians' behalf to work on securing the guarantees Arafat needs to accept postponing the declaration of a state.

Arafat has come under mounting international pressure to delay declaring a state before the Israeli elections on Mav 17. But since Israel moved elections forward from late 2000. he has refused to give a firm indication he will proceed with such a declaration on May 4. Israeli Prime Minister Benyamin Netanyahu, who opposes Palestinian statehood. has used the prospect of a unilateral declaration as a main card in his reelection drive. The EU does not oppose Palestinian self-determination but wants the Palestinians to negotiate independence with

NEWS IN BRIEF

Two dead, four injured in Algeria attacks

ALGIERS (AFP) - Two people were killed and four injured in Algeria on Friday and Saturday in two attacks blamed on armod Islamists, press reports said Sunday. Two army conscripts bad their throats slit Friday evening by a group of armed Islamists at a fake roadblock set up on a main road near the town of Taourirt in the Bouira region, 120 kilometres east of Algiers. Local security forces intervened and chased off the group, consisting of a dozen men. One security force member was wounded in a gunfire exchange with the Islamists, newspapers reported. On Saturday evening, three people in a car were seriously injured when their vehicle hit a bomb placed on the roadside near the coastal town of Ain Tagourait, west of Algiers. In addition, the governmentrun daily Al Moudjahid said two of its newspaper delivery staff narrowly escaped death Saturday morning after being stopped at a fake roadblock near Souk Al Had, some 60 kilometres from Algiers.

'Sudan plane bombs rebel-held town'

NAIROB1 (R) - A Sudan air force plane dropped 10 bombs on the rebel-held town of Yei, in southern Sudan on Sunday, the rebel Sudan Peoples Liberation Army (SPLA) said in Nairobi. According to the SPLA spokesman, the bombs narrowly missed the local hospital, but killed two women and a four-year-old child. Last week the SPLA reported a similar bombing attack on nearby Kaji Kaji, close to the Uganda border.

Thousands remember slain journalist

ISTANBUL (AFP) - Thousands of Turks turned out across the country Sunday to commemorate the sixth anniversary of the murder of a prominent journalist and to demand that his killers be found and brought to justice. Ugur Mumcu, a reporter for the daily Cumhuriyet who had been investigating links between the mafia and the state, was killed by a bomb placed in his car in Ankara on Jan. 24, 1993. The murder is widely believed to bave been committed by gangs operating with the implicit consent of the state and licensed to kill political dissenters, but no arrests have yet been made. At ceremonies in several cities on Sunday, mourners carried candles and pictures of Mumcu, and laid flowers and wreaths at memorial stones for the journalist.

Iraqi MPs to resume debate on Kuwait

BAGHDAD (R) - Iraq's parliament will resume a debate on Tuesday on whether the country should continue to recognise its 1991 Gulf war foe Kuwait and demarcation of borders between the two states, a senior MP said on Sunday. "The National Assembly will hold an extraordinary sessinn to dehate a number of issues, among them Iraq's recognition of Kuwait and borders between the two countries," said Khalid Al Douri, head of the parliament's Arab and Foreign Relations Committee. Douri said Iraq had met its commitments toward Kuwait but the emirate had not met its obligations toward Baghdad.

The question remains whether the people who stay behind after Mordechai leaves will be able to maintain the checks and balances, ... to prevent an unnecessary adventure," said Arnos Harel, another Haaretz military expert.

Such concerns were heightened when Netanyahu offered Mordechai's job to Moshe Arens, an unabashed hawk who served as defence minister in 1983-84 and from 1990 to 1992.

In his years as a minister and member of parliament, Arens, 73, opposed the 1979 peace treaty with Egypt, the end of the costly 1982-85 war in Lebanon and the Oslo accords with the Palestinians.

He also reportedly argued for Israeli strikes against Iraq during the 1991 Gulf war. More recendy Areas, who

In Lebanon, a recent escalation in attacks on soldiers guarding the Israeli-occupied buffer zone in the south of the country prompted several ministers to call for harsh retaliation against Lebanese civilian targets and Syrian forces stationed in Lebanon.

Military and defence ministry officials expressed concern in recent weeks that Netanyahu could be tempted to launch such attacks as a way of boosting his political standing.

Palestinian prisoners begin hunger strike

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM (R) - Palestinian political prisoners in a Palestinian iail in the West Bank city of Nablus began a hunger strike on Sunday to protest against their detention without trial, an international legal group said.

Law Society, an affiliate of the International Commission of Jurists based in Geneva, said 64 political prisoners in Jneid prison in self-ruled Nablus were on hunger strike.

"The political prisoners have reiterated that their hunger strike was launched after 17 months of detention without trial or charges and after all decisions and promises to free them have been ignored," the organisation said in a statement

"This is the fourth time prisoners in Ineid prison have staged a hunger strike. Some prisoners were released on Jan. 17," the legal group said.
